there is needed which shall protect the interests TO HONOR WHITELAW REID. and preperty of the author just as the publisher pretects his own. PREPARATIONS FOR PUBLIC DINNERS.

Let Mr. Macmillan read the commentary on his speech by the editor of the trade organ above mentioned:

-Whatever may have been the state of affairs in the remote past, it certainly is not true to day that publishers drink champagne from the skulls of unhappy writers. In the present era only sma. teurs imagine that the publisher is a sort of ghoul and confiding men and women of genius. The Committee, arose and said: interests of authors and publishers, as Mr. Macnism between the man who writes a book and the man who publishes it. If there were, both would speedily go to the wall, the publisher probably going first."

Such is the attitude of a publisher of whom I will say nothing except that he thust know better. The rancorous tone of his comment on a goodtempered speech from his own side is only of the colonial house quoted a moment ago, the class of publisher who resents the interference of the Society of Authors, resents its existence, and for himself the terms of the contract between them. But those days are going, if not gone. The number of members of the Society has risen from 250 three years ago to 780; its business has increased in a still greater ratio. If an author now makes a bad or stupid bargain with a publisher, he has only himself to thank, for here is a society which, without pay, will be delighted to help him G. W. S. make a good and wise bargain.

The new billiding of the North Inver Savings 1848, 352, 200 West Thirty-fourth-st, which was begun last May, was opened for inspection by the architect last night. The bank will be opened for business as soon as the completion of the new vault will permit the removal of the books and securities from the old building at No. 474 Eighthave. The new building is a beautiful and graceful structure of granite and brick, with a highly ornate front, ave. The new building is a beauting and gracers, structure of granite and brick, with a highly ennate front, a chole roof with a clock which is illuminated at night, and with a vanited roof made entirely of glass, as that the place is light on the darkest days. The front of the structure suggests that there are two or three stories, but this is only done to make it symmetrical. In reality the entire building is only one huge room devoted to the work of the bank. The interior is beautifully fluished in white and gold for the ceiling and upper parts of the walls, while the lower parts of the walls are Italian marble of rich, deep color. This runs clear around the interior, except where it is broken by the two handsome fireplaces of brown tiles, and by the safe vanit, a place seven feet deep, six feet wide and ten feet high, provided with the most approved form of burglar-proof combinations and lined throughout with the electric protection system, whele gives the alarm in the nearest police station if the wall of the safe be pierced by a tool as fine as tion if the wall of the safe be pierced by a tool as fine as
